Thank you for taking the time to read my profile. I hope that you will find my experiences and ideas interesting.

My name is Andrew Makrelis. I was born in Athens in 1970. Following the graduation from High School I got my Bsc and Post-graduate from UK institutions as a Mechanical Engineer and returned home to an Engineering family and immediately got a job at a large Greek Engineering company.

Working for the first few years in Greece as an Engineer, when the company established a branch in Romania having already been awarded a job following an international tender, I grasped the opportunity to work as a Technical Director of the Romanian Branch for a further 3 years. I managed to learn the language fairly well and got very well networked in Romania. The experience that I have acquired was really important as I collaborated with Romanians, British (due to mainly my British education), Japanese (due to Joint Ventures we formed with a Japanese Construction Company in Romania) Italians, Portuguese and managed also to land a good contract for the Company I worked for, to be constructed in Greece on behalf of our Japanese collaborators.

Following the buyout of the company by a larger enterprise I was hired by another Greek Construction Company who was desperately trying to get into the Romanian construction market, to establish their branch in Romania. I managed to land them five contracts worth close to 25mil euros. Not bad for one and a half years job. Following this company going into receivership, I was already thinking of getting back to Greece and starting my own job.

After one year of looking around, a lot of trips to Italy and Germany and visits to lots of exhibitions and fairs, I decided to put my love for computers and the internet to good use. I signed a contract and got the exclusivity for www.franchise-net.gr,
